The gap year

A 'gap year' is usually taken the year before the start of university life, between secondary school and higher education or employment, or between higher education and a job. You've probably been in full-time education for about 15 years, so you may welcome (1) a break. But that doesn't mean you should spend the time sitting on your backside doing nothing. You need to find out what's on offer, how long it may last, and how you are going to pay for it.

Many will desire the traditional option of going abroad, and there are various possibilities. Some schemes allow (2) you to go to another continent and work in a school or on an environmental project. These will vary in length from a month or so to the best part of a year, so check carefully. While your accommodation may be paid for, transport and other costs may not, so the big issue will be the amount of money you need to make it achievable (3).

Others will see a year out as a chance to work and save money for university. However, since finding full-time work may prove difficult at the moment, you should consider looking for a part-time job.

Now, is a gap year a good idea? The advantages are that you'll gain (4) independence —personal, financial, maybe both— and will be better prepared for university life. It doesn't matter that you'll be a year older than many of the other undergraduates —you'll probably handle (5) the transition to university better.

Fascinating facts about "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial"

... Steven Spielberg's original concept for the movie was the story of a family that was terrorized in their home by aliens. He instead decided to go with a family-friendly movie and the family-in-jeopardy (1) concept was developed into Poltergeist.

... Most of the "E.T." script¹ was written while filming Raiders of the Lost Ark. Spielberg dictated the story to screenwriter² Melissa Mathison, who was the then-girlfriend and future wife of Harrison Ford.

... Harrison Ford himself was initially intended to have a cameo role in the film as Elliott's school principal, but the scene was cut. Spielberg felt that he would distract people from the film.

... Elliott was originally supposed to lure (2) E.T. into the house with M&Ms, but Mars, Inc. turned down the request to use their candy. Reese's Pieces were used instead, and its placement resulted in a 65% surge (3) in sales.

... E.T.'s face was modeled after the poet Carl Sandburg, a pug³, and Albert Einstein.

... All the puppetry was performed by an 86cm tall stuntman⁴, except for the scenes in the kitchen, which were done by a 10-year-old boy who was born without legs but was an expert on walking on his hands.

... To ensure realistic responses from the actors, Spielberg shot (4) the film in chronological order (something that is rarely done). And it worked! All the emotional responses from the actors in the final scene are real.

... Spielberg came up with the concept for a sequel called E.T. II: Nocturnal Fears, where Elliott and his friends are kidnapped (5) by other aliens and E.T. would come to their rescue. It would also be revealed that E.T.'s real name is Zrek.

¹script: guión

²screenwriter: guionista

³pug: pug chino (un tipo de perro)

⁴stuntman: doble o especialista
